CARDEN IS MARRIED TO BROOKLYN GIRL

British Envoy to Guatemala Is Spending Some Time in New York.

BY LA MARQUISE DE FONTENAY.

SIR LIONEL CARDEN, British envoy to Guatemala, who has been spending the past week in New York, en route to his post, is married to a Brooklyn girl, who was Miss Anne Eliza Lefferts, of Flatbush. He has seen a good deal of consular and diplomatic service on this side of the Atlantic, in Mexico, Cuba, Guatemala, etc., and is a nephew of that John Carden who was popularly known as "Woodcock" Carden, owing to the number of times that he had been fired at by discontented tenants on his Barnane estates, in Tipperary. It is he, who falling violently in love with a relative, Miss Eleanor Arbuthnot, instead of realizing that his attentions were distasteful, he conceived the foolish idea that she really reciprocated his affection, but was prevented by her friends from accepting his proposals. So he planned an abduction, when she was returning with her sister, Lady Gough, from church.

The preparations which he made were on the most elaborate scale. He had arranged relays of horses between Templemore and Galway, fifty miles away, and in Galway he had a vessel with steam up, ready to convey his expected captive and himself to the Continent. The attempt, however, failed, thanks to the vigorous resistance of the ladies and of a peasant, John McGrath, who ran to their assistance. John Carden took to flight, but was overtaken, captured by an armed posse, who, for a wonder, did not kill him, tried at the Tipperary Assizes in 1854, and sentenced to two years' imprisonment, under the old Irish law, enacted in 1834, for punishing such as "carried away maidens that be inheritors."

Abductors in those days used to put the girl before them on the horse. Instead of behind, in order that they might claim that it was she who had taken the lead in the abduction, and that it was they who had been carried off by her, instead of she by them. John McGrath, as a reward for thus coming to the rescue of Lady Gough and Miss Arbuthnot, was granted a position in the inland revenue service, from which he retired on a pension in 1898, and died about five years ago.

Lord Hemphill, who, having remained single until he had passed his sixtieth birthday, is now about to marry Hon. May Hamilton, more than a quarter of a century his junior, is a noted member of the English, and especially of the Irish bar, is a King's counsel and a radical. He has taken an active part in the endeavors of the present government to secure remedial legislation in connection with the solution of the land problem in Ireland, and on one occasion brought down the House of Lords by declaring in the most solemn manner that the only way of really curing Irish discontent was to "plant the tenants" in "the soil." This was a slip of the tongue. For, as he had been advocating tenant ownership, he meant that the tenants should be firmly planted "on" the soil, and not six feet beneath the surface, as construed by some of his brother peers.

The Hemphill peerage is of modern origin, having been created seven years ago in behalf of the present Lord Hemphill's father, who was one of the principal judges of Ireland. The Lord Hemphill's fiancée, the Hon. May Hamilton, is a daughter of the late Lord Belhaven and Stenton. The late Lord Belhaven experienced a considerable amount of difficulty in establishing his rights to the Belhaven barony. In fact, nearly ten years elapsed from the time of the death of the eighth Lord Belhaven until he could, in the face of much opposition on the part of rival claimants, establish his rights to the satisfaction of the Committee of Privileges of the House of Lords. The late Lord Belhaven also left no son, and was succeeded, after litigation, by a very remote cousin, Alexander Hamilton, the present peer, in the entailed Wishaw estates in Lanarkshire. He refrained, however, from taking any steps to establish his claim to the peerages before the Committee of Privileges of the House of Lords, the attitude of the crown, which is invariably advised by the Committee of Privileges in such matters, is best shown by the fact that although the present Lord Belhaven's sisters have applied for a patent of precedence, to take rank as if their father had succeeded to the Belhaven peerage, and which would have had the effect of enabling them to place the predicate of honor before their name, the application has not been granted.

On the other hand, the Scottish peers, who assemble at Holyrood at each general election for the purpose of choosing sixteen of their number to represent their order in the House of Lords at Westminster, have included him among their delegates, taking the ground that the award of the entailed Belhaven estates of Wishaw to him by the Scottish courts of law, constituted in their eyes a sufficient assurance that he was the real Lord Belhaven.

The trouble with Lord Belhaven's claim, in the eyes of the crown, is his failure to prove the absolute extinction of the male issue of Captain Francis Hamilton, younger brother of the father of the ninth Lord Belhaven, and who died in 1862, leaving issue of whom all sight has been lost. Should any son of this Captain Francis Hamilton, who belonged to the Ninety-fourth Regiment of Infantry, appear upon the scene, he would undoubtedly have rights to the barony of Belhaven and Stenton, and also to the Wishaw estates, prior to those of the present lord, who has to go back to the middle of the seventeenth century in order to prove his relationship to the ninth lord.

It is said that there are several claimants to the honors and estates of Lord Belhaven, one of them here in America, who are prevented from taking any steps to establish their pretensions by the terrible expense involved in the legal proceedings which would be necessary to enforce their rights.

"Single Speech Hamilton," who was one of the reputed authors of the Junius letters, and served as Chancellor of the Exchequer in Ireland from 1783 to 1784; Sir Edward Walter Hamilton, who was the private secretary as well as the most faithful biographer of Gladstone; Sir William Hamilton, who was envoy at Naples at the beginning of the last century, and husband of the notorious Emma Lady Hamilton, the Egeria of Admiral Lord Nelson, all belonged to the Belhaven branch of the house of Hamilton. Lord Belhaven has only one child, a son, Captain Ralph Hamilton, who spent some time in this country a couple of years ago with his wife, Lady Grizel Hamilton, a daughter of General the Earl of Dundonald.

Inasmuch as Prince John Solytkoff is figuring in the festivities connected with the celebration of the tercentenary of the Romanoff dynasty as grand marshal of the Russian nobility, and has been recognized by the czar as the chief representative of the Muscovite aristocracy, it may be as well to explain that his family is perhaps the most illustrious in the land of the czars. It furnished an empress to the reigning dynasty, in the person of Feodorovna Solytkoff, who married Czar Ivan IV, and thus became the mother of Empress Anne.

Nicholas Solytkoff, the first to receive the princely title, for his victory over Frederick the Great of Prussia at the battle of Kunersdorf. Prince Ivan Solytkoff, his son, was also a famous general, and was created a field marshal by Emperor Paul. Sergius Solytkoff is, indeed, popularly credited with having been the father of Emperor Paul, owing to his attentions to the Grand Duchess Catherine, afterwards Empress Catherine the Great. He is set down in biographical works as "the first official lover of Catherine the Great."

Prince Ivan Solytkoff died as Governor-General of Moscow, and left two sons, the late Prince Dmitri, who bequeathed at his death all his racing stable in England, including his place at Newmarket, known as the Kremlin, to his "friend," Mrs. Elizabeth and brilliant feature. It is one of vaudeville's mightiest offerings, the kind conceived and developed by an artist, carrying unusual charm to artists and others of artistic impulses and acknowledged by all to be an act of surpassing beauty. Artists' models of remarkable beauty in face and figure, chosen for their special fitness for the posing required of them, will be seen in living reproductions of the famous works of European masters. Millet's "Returning From the Fields," Danforth's "Ruth and Naomi" and many other famous pictures will be reproduced in life figures, the special scenery and electrical effects enhancing the beauty of the offering. This act is to be featured at the Panama-Pacific Exposition, San Francisco, in 1915, a special building being erected at the Golden Gate for the purpose.

AMUSEMENTS.

Quite as splendid a feature, and one that has attained almost equal fame and popularity in the best class vaudeville houses, will be that provided by Georgette, called the Little dynamo of vaudeville, a juvenile entertainer, gifted beyond a doubt by wonderful entertaining abilities in singing, dancing and impersonating.

An act calling for visual accuracy, as well as manual dexterity, in the way of sure catching and rhythmic tossing, will be provided by Havelock's comedy minstrels, a gathering of young fellows popular for their graceful performance and the great amount of humor they are able to crowd into their speedy exhibition.

Blackface comedians that are among the leaders in this line of work will show their cleverness in the appearance of Jennings and Wilson, two young men in a succession of bright songs and parodies and a burst of brilliant dialogue.

A pair of society entertainers in their comedy songs and talk, together with some brilliant piano playing performances, will round out the vaudeville section, the special song numbers being worthy of notice, as will also be the beautiful gowns worn by the lady members of the duo.

Picture-plays will add their entertainment to the strong bill during the three performances each day, there being a matinee at 3 o'clock and two night performances at 7:15 and 9 o'clock, respectively. There will be no change in prices, notwithstanding the great cost of the bill arranged for the week of celebration.
